

NEBOSH and HSE join forces

NEBOSH and the HSE have created a new health and safety qualification for business leaders.

The NEBOSH HSE Certificate in Health and Safety Leadership Excellence has been designed for senior business leaders who want to make a difference to health and safety performance and culture within their organisations.

“This new, one-day qualification highlights the clear moral, legal and financial business case for improving health and safety culture,” said NEBOSH chief executive Teresa Budworth. “It covers the key competencies and behaviours HSE research indicates are associated with health and safety leadership excellence.”

90 years and still going strong

To help mark nine decades of delivering the highest quality training and education, RRC International has some very special offers at this year's Safety and Health Expo, taking place on 19-21 June at the ExCel exhibition centre in London's Docklands.

A prize draw will each day see the lucky winner receive a £1000 training voucher for use on any RRC course, plus runners up prizes of Health and safety at work for Dummies books. One lucky winner will also win a mystery prize, something to enjoy and nothing to do with training or health and safety.

Visit stand R115 to enjoy show discounts of 30% on all online courses, plus some special offers on some classroom courses.

New wellbeing culture model

Building on many years of experience in both safety and wellbeing, Dr Carolyn Yeoman and Paul Bizzell of OCAID Wellbeing have launched a new model for assessing and developing wellbeing culture.

“Resilient People in Resilient Organisations” aligns with and goes beyond the recently announced PAS 3002, Code of practice on improving the health and wellbeing within an organisation. It addresses how to proactively develop a wellbeing culture, resulting in a strategic business development path.

OCAID Wellbeing are experts in wellbeing, employee engagement and business risk management, and sees wellbeing as a strategic opportunity for business improvement based on the well-established approach to managing safety.

JSP supports construction charity

JSP has donated £13,461 to the Lighthouse Club raised from sales of its Lighthouse range of safety products.

The money will help promote and support the helpline, which provides confidential, 24 hour support and advice for the construction industry's workforce and their families on any problems they are facing, including health and wellbeing, mental health, or financial difficulties caused by accident, illness or bereavement.

Last year, the Construction Industry Helpline supported more than 1500 construction families in crisis and 400 families were granted £705,000 of emergency financial help.

Driving engagement: top takeaways

Effective Software recently hosted a series of conferences on driving engagement in health and safety, looking at how organisations can promote engagement in safety processes among employees. Here are some of the key outcomes:

- behaviour-based safety: is it right to exclusively blame workers for incidents, or should management practices be scrutinised?
- workplace safety culture: how to promote an environment of positive incident and hazard reporting and avoid a blame-based culture;
- barriers: addressing the struggle between cost and safety; and human factors;
- importance of leadership: engagement in H&S processes must start at the top to get buy-in from workers; and
- technology-based solutions: how technology can help you drive health and safety engagement.

3M and Scott Safety working as one

Science-based technology company 3M and premium manufacturer Scott Safety are now working together as one, providing customers with a complete safety solution.

3M's acquisition of Scott Safety in 2017 has added a wide range of innovative safety solutions to the company's already extensive offering. These include self-contained breathing apparatus systems and gas and flame detection instruments, among other devices.

The companies are also pooling their expansive expertise to remain at the forefront of product innovation.

They will exhibit as one at this year's Safety and Health Expo, which runs from 19-21 June at the ExCel exhibition centre in London, at stand M220.
